A conference call allows more participants to join the same call at the same time. While the term is mainly used to describe multi-part telephone calls, advances in Voice-over-Internet-Protocol (VoIP) technology allowed to host and combine conference calls from smartphones, tablets, laptops and desktop devices. Below, we explore the types of conferences, how technology works, and the things you should consider before choosing a supplier. What are the types of conference calls? That you are part of a startup, of a unique property or company, you are likely to have at least some collaborative call every day. Companies have recently adopted video conferencing to keep the teams connected, but 71% of companies still use audio-only conference calls to do business. As a result, the term conference call has expanded to include three different types of remote collaboration: traditional call conference: participants join a collective call only audio with a group of three or more. Participants can use a fixed line or a VoIP-Powered device to connect to the call. VIDEO CONFERENCE: Participants join a conference call that includes real-time videos of the participants. Web Conference: Participants join a conference, and a presenter delivers a presentation to the group on the Internet. It is mainly a live one-to-many call, but participants can usually interact in a limited capacity that differentiates a web conference from a pre-recorded video. Ultimately, the teams must remain connected, and it is becoming more difficult to have face-to-face meetings with rising remote teamwork. Therefore, no matter what type of conference you call you use, make use of technology has become an essential part of the business world. How does a call conference work? Conference calls work a lot in the same way as a phone call but with three or more participants. There are two main ways to start a call conference: Caller adds the call participants: a caller starts a call by composing a participant. Then, other participants are added to the call as the caller compose additional numbers. Participants connect to a conference bridge: the participants compose a number that connects them to a conference bridge, a special server capable of simultaneously responding to more calls and patching audio through all callers to listen and participate. As a result, conferences are a quick, simple and accessible way to people around the world to communicate. While the messaging, messaging and messaging apps continue to grow in popularity, nothing beats the ease and effectiveness of jumping A call, provided you are using a quality service. Conference call providers The basic capacity of conference calls is a feature that is in most of the best business phone systems. However, suppliers have been able to differentiate by offering additional services to update calls. For example, some are higher high maximum, while others allow for additional features such as call recording, polls, video conferencing, and more. Each service varies by price, functionality, functionality and scalability. There are plenty of providers of conference calls on the market, but here are some of our favorites: Nextiva Nextiva Business VoIP is a telephone system that provides a suite of communication and collaboration tools for businesses to connect with teammates and clients. Establishing companies with unlimited voice and video calls, caps unlimited participants, SMS business, messaging team, the recording device, file sharing and much more. The plans start at $ 21.95 per user, per month for five to 19 users with a 36-month agreement, but volume discounts are available as you add more users. You can learn more about Nextiva and other top quality suppliers for the traditional conference call service by visiting our article on the best conference call services. Zoom Zoom is popular as a business-to-use personal video conferencing tool, but its platform also offers high-quality companies, reliable, and audio conference calls at affordable prices. The Platforma s easy to use interface, in combination with its multifunctional capabilities, making it a go-to video conferencing choice for small businesses and enterprises alike. Learn more Zoom and other video conferencing options by visiting our guide on the best video conferencing software. GoToMeeting GoToMeeting is an audio and video conferencing platform that provides companies with the tools needed to create professional meetings. Features such encounter blocking, enterprise messaging, the cloud recording and transcripts of the calls come every conference call to the next level. Participants can attend calls from your Internet-enabled device or landline. Plans start at $ 14.00 for the organizer, a month and include maximum 150 participants. How to improve your Conference Calls Not all conference calls are handled the same way. Some may lead to in effective team collaboration that expands communication and opens the door to new opportunities. However, many conference calls can waste valuable time and resources. Here are some ways to make your calls more productive conference: Provide a local dial-in number: If you have international participants on your call, provide local dial-in so that they can avoid paying conference long distance taxes. Send the instructions: Dona t hire everyone knows how to join and participate in a conference call. Platforms like Zoom and GoToMeeting provides detailed how-to-join instructions with call invitations, including all incoming calls, access codes, links, PINs and more. Use the right tools: conference call providers upgrade the host with features such as muting participant, noise cancelling, calling ID, and locks meetings. UseTools to create high quality professional calls. Record your meetings: Eliminate the need to take aggressive notes recording your conference calls. Most providers will offer this functionality and will allow you to record locally or in the cloud. Frequently Asked Questions How do I get a phone number? Your VoIP provider or conference call will provide you with a telephone number for your conference calls. Most providers will give to each licensed user a personal meeting number and will allow you also to create a unique number of conference call for each meeting. This allows your business to host more conferences simultaneously. There is a limit to the duration of a conference? This will depend on your provider. Some providers have limitations, while others provide an unlimited duration conference call. The plan also choose will have an impact on the length of the call. Vendors often encourage you to update your company's license to gain access to more long conference calls. Callers can join a conference call prior to the guest? Most of the time, the hosts will have to join the conference call before other participants can enter the call. However, some suppliers conference calls offer capabilities to allow participants to join before host. What is the advantage of doing an audio conference alone against making a video conference? The conferences are less distracted and intimidating. When it is combined with VoIP, audio calls require less bandwidth, and even land lines can join the call. International participants can attend to my conference? Yes'. Your call provider conference will give you a list of dial-in numbers for specific participants for the country to join your conference calls. Calls the Bottom Line Conference is not a new communication tool, but will continue to grow in popularity, since the © workforce becomes more distributed. Whether your business and employees use VoIP, landlines, or a combination of the two, the conferences are a way to connect universally accessible from anywhere in the world. If your business currently uses the video conferencing software, consider experimenting with audio-only conference calls. It's an alternative cheaper, less distracting that caters better to the largest audience of meetings. Take advantage of this technology by incorporating conference calls in your communication stack.
