Where is the time to do things like changing Wikipedia? They watch less television, says the author Clay Shirky in a fantastic, short conversation at the recent Web 2.0 conference. Shirky makes a compelling case that people are just learning how to deal with the "cognitive surplus" of modern leisure life offers us. We are waking up from the "collective bender" to look without thoughts sitcom and instead, we are choosing instead to spend our free volunteer time, interact and Web 2.0'ing online. Press the game button to watch Shirky do his case for the full effect, or press the link below to read the text transcription of his speech. The next time your TV-watching friends make fun of you for opting for the blog, instead, point them to this speech. Gin, Television and Social Surplus [Behold, all] Even the best TV shows make mistakes. Whether due to a lack of creativity, budget concerns, or a tight production program, almost every TV show has released an episode that stands out from the rest for an exceptional lack of quality. But all these mistakes, what are the worst? Let's look back at some of the most memorably bad episodes of television. 1. Happy Days: "Hollywood (Part 3)" Henry Winkler in Happy Days | ABC Felice The days began as a series that gave a realistic look to the small town life in the 1950s, mostly expelling nostalgia for characters below the earth facing family issues of race, sex and money. But, as often happens with sitcoms, he eventually turned into a caricature of his former self, laying cheap catch phrases and putting his characters into increasingly ridiculous situations. The stupidity of these off-the-wall stories has reached its height in this episode of Season 5 which sees Henry Winkler's Fonzie literally jumping the shark on water skis — such a ridiculous plot became our cultural short film for a great TV show that does something so stupid there is no return. 2. The Simpsons: "The Principal and the Pauper" The Simpsons | 20th Century Fox Television The Simpsons have always had a playful relationship with his fans (see: Comic Book Guy), but his reviled Season 9 episode, "The Principal and the Pauper" is probably the only time writers seemed to blur the fans. The episode, which aired over time many fans believe that the series began to descend, reveals that Principal Skinner is an impostor who took the place of his military superior, who returns to Springfield and reveals the truth. In a final that is smart and infuriating for the way in which satirizes the lack of viewers change demand from their sitcoms, animated or otherwise, the entire city of Springfield exiles the true Skinner and embraces the false, accepting never mention the incident again. 3. Dallas: "Back to Camelot, Part I" At least the Simpsons made a joke to piss his fans — the long-lasting soap opera Dallas, did it with a straight face in his infamous Season 10 before, which reveals that all the events of the previous season, including the death of a main character, were only part of Pam's dream. For a series that is preached on plot intrigues, such lazy contempt for history and for the time of spectators still feel like a slap in the face. 4. Dexter: "Do you remember the monsters?" Michael C. Hall in Dexter | The popular Showtime Showtime series on a conflicting serial killer working in the CSI department in Miami went off the tracks in a great way from his fifth season. Things have worsened and are increasingly out of the country, leading to a fugue ending that forgives its title character and allows it to completely avoid itsThe fans were waiting for years to see what happened when Dexter finally paid his crimes, but instead they had to see him escape unable to live a quiet life like ... a timber theft? For real? 5. How I met your mother: â € â € œTheck foreverâ € Josh Radnor and Cristin Miliots in how I met your mother | | As I met your mother was for the most part another fun Sitcom Hang Out, but it was preached on a central question: to those who have finally done, which has become the mother mentioned in the title of the show? Instead of a sweet sendoff, â € â,~ â "last forever ç â,~ is a depressing misfire that sees ted back to a former, which becomes the mother of his children before he die out of the screen and allowing him to ted Finally admit his love for Robin. It is a depressing way, strangely petty to finish a series AA ç which was otherwise as carefree. 6. Star Trek: the next generation: â € â,~ â "Shades of Grayâ € â,~ Patrick Stewart in Star Trek: The Next Generation | CBS a clip show is always an unwelcome surprise, giving spectators a great quantity of material that have already seen instead of a real real episode usually due to budget concerns. Fortunately, the practice has died for the more now, but also the best Yesteryear shows, like Star Trek: the next generation, are guilty of cutting the corners with these painfully non-original episodes. â € â,~ "Shades of Gray. â € â,~" concerns Commander Riker subjected to a procedure that forces him to revive the previous events. It contains so little new material that almost should not count as one's own episode. 7. The Office: â € â,~ â "The" Rainn Wilson farm in the office | NBC The office has decreased in an important way after the departure of Steve Carell, whose Amabile Michael Scott but clinged was the heart And the soul of the show for the first seven seasons. The ninth season reached a new low with this episode of Cartoon for the Awight by Rainn Wilson, inheriting the farm of his aunt. The problem is that the ridicule Dwight is not fun outside the setting of the banal office, â € â «The farm is barely not even an episode of office, since it was intended as a backdoor pilot for a spinoff of Dwight that is never Come to be, thanks to God. 8. Lost: â € â,~ â "Stranger in a strange land ç â,~ Matthew Fox on Lost | ABC Itâ € â» Sa Testament As a compelling the central mystery of the lost was That spectators were able to endure episodes such as the 3 "Worthern Earth season in a strange land.â € â,~" Sa Episod Flashback I contains nothing but filler, putting the general history on the pause so that the writers can focus on fascinating new details as the Jack took the tattoos. Emigliato! 9. Buffy The Vampire Slayer: â € â,~ â "Beer badâ € â,~ Buffy The Vampire Slayer | The WB is another case of a good show that succumbs to a disappointing trend on television. This time, Buffy the Vampire Slayer makes a special special episode for the dangers of drinking and drug use, made exclusively to help the show score funds from the National Medication Control Policy Office . The plot sees Buffy transformed into a cavewoman after drinking a supernatural beer in service of a Hamfisted message dumbbed-down on drinking responsibly. 10. Any episode of rock policeman most of the listed episodes come from good shows that do not have Scraped time, or simply evacuated badly, but take a moment to focus on the series that no other than terrible episode after a terrible episode - ie, Cop Rock, a Hill Street Blues creator show that maintained the procedural format of the police, but then he added elements of the musical theater. It is a hilarious curiosity, but a horrible exhibition anyway. Follow Jeff Rind Skopf on Twitter @Jrindskopf Check Out Entertainment Cheat Sheet on Facebook!
