Sometimes, you encounter words in a non-native tongue while using your Android device. The Google Translate app has an awesome feature where it will translate any text you highlight. An overlay will appear, and on this overlay, there will be the translation of the foreign word. This can help you if you need a translation quick fix or if you are learning a new language. The Google Translate tap-to-translate tool works in any app that will let you long-press to select text, so it's essentially a system-wide translator for Android devices. This feature can translate a whole phrase or a single word, but it's not enabled by default, so it takes some setting up. First, you'll need the Google Translate app, so open your Play Store app and search for "Google Translate" or use the link below to install it. Play Store Link: Google Translate (free) Open the Google Translate app. Press the hamburger button in the top-right corner, then select "Settings." Next, choose "Tap to Translate," then on the following screen, switch on the "Enable" toggle. After you press "Enable," you will be asked to give Google Translate the "Draw over apps permission." This allows the app to display a popup over other apps so that you can see the translation without leaving the app you are currently in. Allow this permission by enabling the "Permit drawing over other apps" switch. After you have switched this on, you can press the back button in the top left. Back on the Tap to Translate screen, you can also turn on the "Show notification" switch. This will create a notification signifying that the feature is enabled. You can also access the translate in any app feature from the notification by pressing the "Translate" button within the notification. You may change your default language by pressing the "Preferred language" button. Setting your primary language will set what the app translates into by default. Now, you'll just need some text in a different language to test out the new feature. If you are on your mobile device, you can head here for a Spanish Wikipedia page to use as an example. To use the new feature, long-press text in any app (note that the feature doesn't work with hyperlinks). When you select the text, a small popup will appear over your now highlighted text. On the right of this popup, press the three dots. A new popup will appear — here press the "Translate" button. This will show a new popup with the translation of your highlighted word. There are a few caveats to tap to translate. This feature does not work if you can't highlight the text. It will not work in apps where when you long press on the text and a custom context menu is displayed. This feature also doesn't work in the Android 9.0+ recent apps menu (where you can long-press the text on the app's card in the recent apps menu). Additionally, Google Chrome has a feature that automatically takes over for text selection with a popup search card at the bottom of the screen. Tap to translate still works in Google Chrome, but you may have to select the text again or use the little blue drag handles to override the bottom Google Chrome popup. TripAdvisor review from PortugueseComposing a WhatsApp message in RussianAndroid apps that use Android text selection behavior will already have this feature enabled, so no extra steps need to be taken. Developers who created custom text selection behavior for their apps can easily implement this feature by following the below steps:Scan via the PackageManager through all packages that have the PROCESS_TEXT intent filter (for example: com.google.android.apps.translate - if it installed) and add them as MenuItem's into TextView selections for your appTo query the package manager, first build an intent with the action private Intent createProcessTextIntent() { return new Intent().setAction(Intent.ACTION_PROCESS_TEXT).setType("text/plain"); }Then retrieve the supported activities private List getSupportedActivities() { PackageManager packageManager = mTextView.getContext().getPackageManager(); return packageManager.queryIntentActivities(createProcessTextIntent(), 0); }add an item for each retrieved activity and attach an intent to it to launch the action public void onInitializeMenu(Menu menu) { // Start with a menu item order value that is high enough // so that your "PROCESS_TEXT" menu items appear after the // standard selection menu items like Cut, Copy, Paste. int menuItemOrder = 100; for (ResolveInfo resolveInfo : getSupportedActivities()) { menu.add(Menu.NONE, Menu.NONE, menuItemOrder++, getLabel(resolveInfo)).setIntent(createProcessTextIntentForResolveInfo(resolveInfo)).setShowAsAction(MenuItem.SHOW_AS_ACTION_IF_ROOM); } }The label for each item can be retrieved with: resolveInfo.loadLabel(mPackageManager);The intent for each item can be created reusing the filter intent that you defined before and adding the missing data:private Intent createProcessTextIntentForResolveInfo(ResolveInfo info) { return createProcessTextIntent().putExtra(Intent.EXTRA_PROCESS_TEXT_READONLY, 1 mTextView.isTextEditable()).setClassName(info.activityInfo.packageName, info.activityInfo.name); }Adding the translation option to your apps text selection menu (if you don't use default Android text selection behavior) is easy and takes just a few extra lines of code. And remember, when a user is composing a text to translate, your app you should keep the selection when the Translate app is triggered.With this new feature, Android Translate app users users will be able to easily translate right from within participating apps. We will be adding more documentation and sample code on this feature in the upcoming weeks. Translate between up to 133 languages. It's had many wonderful improvements over the years. However, since the update giving masculine/feminine translations for gendered languages, copy & paste has been ruined for me. Previously, the app would often predict needed gendered letters/words based on other words being translated, and a simple copy & paste almost always the immediately available next step, it now copies both gendered translations, which can't be pasted into certain fields that have limited characters (Twitter, TikTok, for example). This has become a point of major annoyance, and I find myself often using other translators. I enjoy THIS translator, and have a sense of loyalty to it, despite the absurdity of that, and would love to see copy & paste work only with the gendered translation provided, also excluding the "masculine" and "feminine" indicators, which also gets copied. Google Translate is now a form of augmented reality and is adapted for educational purposes. This application provides users with tools to translate between languages and they now include an image option; users take a photograph of a sign, piece of paper, or other form of written text and receive a translation in the language of their choice. This augmented reality is ground breaking because this allows online learners to access content in other languages. The application also translates spoken word in real time, which allows all learners to access audio in written form, in their own language, online or in-person. This version of augmented reality that is adapted for education can be utilized in an online learning environment and can be utilized by instructional designers. One of the major challenges with instructional design is selecting the correct tools to build learning experiences. With this application, instructional designers are able to create a course in their own language and can make their lesson accessible to learners by recommending Google Translate for accessibility. I plan to utilize this in conjunction with my online lessons and videos in order to reach more students with diverse abilities and primary languages. The Google translate app is a joke. There are very few apps that can lead someone to yell expletives while sitting in their kitchen trying to enjoy a cup of tea. Editing something you've written on the Google Translate App is a pitiful process filled with tapping the screen of your phone over and over attempting to unselect individual words or sentences. Sometimes it selects the entirety of what you've written and won't allow you to unselect it without a fight. It's unconscionable that the process for editing what you've written doesn't follow every other smart phone format. Not only that, when you've finished writing of considerable length, in my case an email, and would like to highlight, copy and paste it, you will quickly realize you cannot highlight and scroll at the same time like you can on any other apple app that includes type. Instead, you're forced to go through a ridiculous process of highlighting as much as you can see, pasting it, returning to the app, copying more and then pasting that. I repeated that process six time before I had copied my email over to gmail. If I had more time I would go into detail about the "define" tool that pops up unprovoked and further adds to the absolute farce that is the UX of this application. For a company like Google to have produced such a dysfunctional infuriating UI is truly shameful.
