RestTemplate Basic Authentication Example

@attacomslan · September 21, 2019

Setting basic authentication header in restTemplate. Resttemplate authentication header example. Spring boot restTemplate authentication header.

Notice, however, that there are many different RestTemplate HTTP request methods listed and only a small fraction of them are named exchange. The list is primarily made up of HTTP method-specific names such as delete, put, getForEntity, postForObject, et cetera. Follow me on Twitter and LinkedIn. You can also subscribe to RSS Feed. ¶ Like this article? TL;DR: Q: What is a request-response pair called? An HTTP POST request is used to create a new resource. Technically speaking, all of these methods perform exchanges in the same sense, but the more focused convenience methods are limited to a specific subset of the possible exchange functionality and parameter+return types. To put it simply, the set of exchange functions are the most general/capable methods provided by RestTemplate, so you can use exchange when none of the other methods provides a complete enough parameter set to meet your needs. What is a request-response pair called? The term exchange is used, almost incidentally, in the official technical documentation of HTTP to refer to an HTTP request combined with the corresponding response. The last method returns the location of the newly created resource instead of returning the full resource. Simple POST Request To make a simple HTTP POST request using RestTemplate, you can use the postForEntity method and pass the request body parameters as a map object: String url = "http://localhost:8080/api/v1/getAllUsers"; RestTemplate restTemplate = new RestTemplate(); Map map = new HashMap(); map.put("name", "John Doe"); map.put("job", "Java Developer"); ResponseEntity response = restTemplate.postForEntity(url, map, Void.class); if (response.getStatusCode() == HttpStatus.OK) { System.out.println("Request Successful"); } else { System.out.println("Request Failed"); } To make a POST request with the JSON request body, we need to set the Content-Type request header to application/json. The first two methods are very similar to what I have discussed before in RestTemplate's GET request tutorial. In this article, you will learn how to make different kinds of HTTP POST requests by using the RestTemplate class in a Spring Boot application. For example: The following example demonstrates how to make an HTTP POST request with JSON request body: String url = "http://localhost:8080/api/v1/getAllUsers"; HttpHeaders headers = new HttpHeaders(); headers.setContentType(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON); Map map = new HashMap(); map.put("userd", 1); map.put("title", "Spring Boot 101"); map.put("body", "A powerful tool for building web apps."); HttpEntity entity = new HttpEntity(map, headers); ResponseEntity response = restTemplate.postForEntity(url, entity, String.class); if (response.getStatusCode() == HttpStatus.CREATED) { System.out.println("Request Successful"); System.out.println(response.getBody()); } else { System.out.println("Request Failed"); System.out.println(response.getStatusCode()); } POST Request with Basic Authentication The following example demonstrates how to add basic authentication to RestTemplate POST request: String url = "http://localhost:8080/api/v1/getAllUsers"; HttpHeaders headers = new HttpHeaders(); headers.setContentType(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON); headers.setAccept(Collections.singletonList(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON)); HttpEntity request = new HttpEntity(headers); ResponseEntity response = restTemplate.postForEntity(url, request, String.class); if (response.getStatusCode() == HttpStatus.OK) { System.out.println("Login Successful"); } else { System.out.println("Login Failed"); } POST Request with Response Mapped to Java Object RestTemplate allows you to map the JSON response directly to a Java object. However looking at the answers to the following questions, it is clear that while this may have represented a de facto standard for some people, many other were not aware of it, or hadn't adopted it. A: An "exchange". Name for HTTP Request+Response The documentation doesn't bother to mention the etymology of the name -- probably assuming that it's obvious. The RestTemplate class provides several template methods like postForObject(), postForEntity(), and postForLocation() for making POST requests. Let us first create a simple Post class: public class Post implements Serializable { private int userd; private int id; private String title; private String body; public Post() { } public Post(int userd, int id, String title, String body) { this.userd = userd; this.id = id; this.title = title; this.body = body; } } We can now use the above class to map the JSON response, as shown below: String url = "http://localhost:8080/api/v1/getAllUsers"; HttpHeaders headers = new HttpHeaders(); headers.setContentType(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON); headers.setAccept(Collections.singletonList(MediaType.APPLICATION_JSON)); Post post = new Post(101, 1, "Spring Boot 101", "A powerful tool for building web apps."); HttpEntity request = new HttpEntity(post, headers); ResponseEntity response = restTemplate.postForEntity(url, request, Post.class); if (response.getStatusCode() == HttpStatus.CREATED) { System.out.println("Post Created"); System.out.println(response.getBody()); } else { System.out.println("Request Failed"); System.out.println(response.getStatusCode()); } Check out the Making HTTP Requests using RestTemplate in Spring Boot guide for more RestTemplate examples.
